

BRIDGE

Bridging Resources In DC to Guide and Educate
DC Social Services Resource Guidebook

After 9/11 we were told that if we had only connected the dots, we might have stopped the attacks. If we had assembled the fragments of information we had, we would have put together a picture. The same is true in understanding poverty. We have to connect the dots among the disparate problems faced by struggling families, problems that may not seem related, yet interact and reinforce and magnify one another.

So the concept of BRIDGE, to map the social services available in the Washington area, may give both providers and individuals a way of connecting the dots, of navigating among the varied agencies to address disparate problems. It can provide a gateway into the multiple forms of assistance that many families need.

A Very Special Thank You to the Students of the Spring 2009 Human Services 152 Class

The Human Services Department of The George Washington University

Funded by the Socially Responsible Initiatives Commission of The George Washington University

“The students of GW University have consistently proven to be some of the most engaged and determined young leaders in our city. From the timely Food Finder Guide to the new BRIDGE publication, they seem all but determined to leave no service stone unturned. I really don’t know which is the more powerful and needed resource—these amazing publications or the students themselves. “

-Robert Egger
Founder and Executive Director of DC Central Kitchen
